Market Commentary

Latin American stocks fell over the month with performance in the Brazilian market weighing on overall regional returns. The MSCI Latin America Index underperformed the MSCI Emerging Markets Index, which rose 0.2%, and the S&P 500 index, which gained 3.2%. The best performing market was Colombia, which was up 5.6% during the month, while the worst relative performer was Brazil, which lost 4.5%. The weaker performance in Brazil came as investors looked for more detail on new President Jair Bolsonaro's plans for key pension reforms. Meanwhile, data showed the country's economic growth slowed sharply in 4Q2018, growing just 0.1% and down on the 0.5% growth reading in the previous quarter. Elsewhere in the region though the economic news has been somewhat better recently with Colombia's economy registering growth of 2.7% last year as low interest rates helped lift investment and household spending.
